BENEATH THE APPLE TREES

Upon a morning sunny
In golden summer-time,
When bees were making honey
And poets making rhyms,
A maiden gowned in satin,
With eyes like sapphire seas,
Was humming low in Latin,
Beneath the apple trees.

"Amor" she sang and after.

"Amat" she coyly said.

Then, with a peal of langhter,
She shook her requish head.

"If he were standing jonfer,
And heard." cried gay Louise,
"What would be do, I wonder,
Beneath the annie tree."

Is there some particular reason for it?

The reporter, in reply to the questions that poured in upon him, endeavored to fornish satisfactory answers, but found in many instances that the Hindoo view of our manners and costumes was so strikingly new to him that he could only offer suggestions.

"And then I see so many rich men here who are not fit to occupy their handsome house. Yes, we often have self-made men in India who rise even from the colle class and become merchants and grainally accumulate wealth. But with every increase of income the condition of the man improves, too, and he is always fit to occupy his station with credit. In our country everything in a man's house is in accordance with his tastes, and mental on the collection.

At one time Gen. Custer tam'd a tiny fieldmouse and kept it in a large, empty ink stand on his desk. It grew very fond of him, and ran over his head and shoulders and even through ha hair. In our country everything in a man's house is in accordance with his tastes, and mental grade, but here I see so often an inferior soul linked with superior furniture. Now why should this be! It does not seem right. I cannot understand it. Now if it were a philosopher—a contemplater (and here he looked kindly at himself)—I can understand that it would be but right for him to have a nicely-appointed house and rooms in which to live and study. But here you take a man who is still a coolie and give him a handsome residence and make him, perhaps, a millionaire. You should not do it. It lowers the tone of your society.

Mr. Toots and the Chickson have two imitators in New York. The feation of going around town with a "neeler" is an old one, and was particularly popular in London twenty or thirty years ago, when nearly every "blood" among the English nobility was necompanied around by a put prine fighter. The youth who is best known in New York as a duie and swell is small, addicted to the single glass, evening drew, absinthe, late supports and ladies of the ballet. He is an owner of several horses that have achieved more or less fame on the turf, and his manner is blass and careiers. He has, in fact, an enormous faculty for sitting still and saying nothing. At such moments be sits and glares composedly at his "heeler," who lounges careles-by in front of him and chats garralously upon subje to of a sporting nature. The heeler is a large men and has a sincere and honset manner.

Art processes do indeed change radically. Twenty years ago the illustrations for journals and magazines were made by men who worked regularly on wages. They were hired and treated as mechanics, and they labored their eight or ten hours a day at benches on the publishers promises on tasks set for them methodically. Naturally, nothing in that system tended to bring out originality. The pictures were poor enough, as can be seen by looking back at old fles of the publications. There was a wooden uniformity of barely passable results. The same usages hold in some establishments, but a complete change has been wrought in the two or three concerns whence the best illustrated periodicals were issued. Hardly any drawing is done by regular employes or

After some further interesting conversation concerning the condition of affairs in India, the reporter thanked Joshee for his courtey, and, intimating that he had obtained sufficient data for his article, was about to retire, when, to his surprise, the Bra imin said:

"I am most glad to furnish you all the information in my power; and now, if you do not object, I would like to obtain some information from you on points that I have not been able to understand."
